Two day training programme

Educational designing for purpose driven learning 'Unlock student's potential for societal challenges'

Do you want to integrate purpose driven learning in your study (educational) programme? Do you want to empower your students on a deeper level? Are you searching for ways how to do this? Do you feel that you have limited time for designing and prototyping? Do you want to connect with like-minded educational professionals?

To explore your deepest motive. To develop yourself toward the meaning you may have in the world and an education that helps you pursue it. Whether studying engineering, economics or health, isn't that what all educators wish for their students? But how to design education that makes this possible? In this two-day training program you will find out, by experience and thoughtful interaction.

This two-day training programme takes place at Saxion UAS in Enschede, The Netherlands. The first day guides you through the framework and designing principles of Purpose Driven Education. The second day will be dedicated to designing your own educational concepts in a pressure cooker. In small groups, you will share and shape your ideas for your institution. You will make use of the expertise and feedback of the whole group to come up with a first concept. In addition, this is the perfect event for you and your institution to create a network and perhaps even design a joint purpose driven course or semester.

Creating education is not something we have to do all by ourselves. By bringing people together, we can bridge gaps and find smarter ways for designing future education. In fact, this is not just a training. Combining educational dreams and appreciation of each other's talents will contribute all of us to help strengthen education in Europe. This training can be a starting point for a strong community to foster sustainable future cooperation between education programmes and universities.
